Upcoming (and Recent) Events

Harry Potter Book Night

We are still overwhelmed by the level of interest that we have had in the Bloomsbury Publications "Harry Potter Book Night" that we will be hosting on Thursday, February 7th. Not only did we have to split it into two events, but the tickets for both of them were snapped up in just over an hour.

Stay tuned both in store, as well as on our social medias for some of the results of this event, and for others like it. In 2019, we are hoping that this will be just the first of a bumper of evening events that we can present to give all of you the chance to experience our new space in new ways!

Used Book Sale

Although there have been a number of changes at Whodunit? of late, in some cases, the more things change, the more they will stay the same. February, for example, will still feature our Used Book Sale, from Tuesday, February 19th to Sunday, February 24th. ALL our Used Books will be half price. So for those who have been waiting to come out of hibernation, and especially those of you who haven't come to visit us yet please be sure to come take advantage of this event!

Children's Book Sale

Many of you have already noted our expanded children's section and have taken advantage of our new capability to stock classics like The Snowman (not to be confused with the Jo Nesbo title…) and new 'classics' like I Need a New Butt. But in keeping with our desire to link to our own past, we will be carrying through a new tradition from 165 will be the return of our Children's Book Sale, offering 15% off all children's books from Friday, March 29th to Sunday, March 31st.

We have no word yet whether we will be having any guest salespeople as we did last year, but we do know that we will be aiming to share our great new holdings for younger readers with people of all ages!

Terry O'Reilly

Part of the transition into our new space has been the opportunity to leave it. Now that technology allows us to take card payments away from the shop without the need for carbon paper, we have been happy to do a number of off-site events. Most recently, we were honoured to be asked to be the bookseller for CBC's Terry O'Reilly (Under the Influence) while he was speaking at the Winnipeg Convention Centre on January 25th. Not only we were thrilled to hear Terry's talks on marketing and podcasting (and take a few hints home for ourselves), we are pleased to be able to meet with many of his fans, and let the larger Winnipeg world know about us, as we provided them with copies of both Mr. O'Reilly's works! Thank you again to Terry, and to the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce for having us!

Wendy's Recent Reads

The type of mystery that I enjoy most is the police procedural. January was a good month for me as two of my favourite authors had new titles, Cynthia Harrod-Eagles' 21st Bill Slider mystery, Headlong, and Quintin Jardine's Cold Case, the 30th Bob Skinner mystery. These came hard on the heels of Susan Hill's long awaited 9th Simon Serailler title, The Comforts of Home. I thought this might be a good time to introduce some of the newer writers of this genre.

Robert Bryndza, has a series which revolves around Det. Erika Forrester. Forrester has just been transferred back to London following a case which went disastrously wrong and resulted in the death of her husband who was also a member of the police force. The Girl in the Ice, is the first title in the series, the body of a young socialite has been discovered frozen in a pond in a park. This is a challenging case exacerbated by the pressures of the well connected family of the victim.

M.J. Arlidge writes about Detective Inspector Helen Grace. We are first introduced to the character in Eeny Meeny. The series is a little on the dark side for me but it has been a very well received.

The Deaths of December, is the first in D.C. Becky Greene series by Susi Holliday. The plot revolves around an Advent Calendar which is dropped off at the police station. No one takes any notice of this until Becky takes a closer look at the calendar and realises that it is connected to a murder that has occurred and that also it may be a portent of murders to come.

Elly Griffiths has a new book coming out in March called the Stranger Diaries. While described by the publisher as a contemporary Gothic thriller it is also a police procedural. The lead female detective is a strong and interesting character who struggles with balancing her professional life and her life as a daughter who lives with her more traditional East Indian parents. I think that this is the most interesting character that I have read about in the last few months.

What I'm Reading by Sian

I must first start with my now bi-monthly confession that I haven't been reading as much as I ought, particularly mysteries. I have a two word explanation: daycare germs. The good news is though that my 'To Read' pile is particularly juicy and there is a lot that is coming in the next few months that I am looking forward to.

Anna Lee Huber joined the trend of female wartime spies with her new 'Verity Kent' series, set in London after WWII. Treacherous is the Night is the second book in that series. It's hard to say too much without giving away the plot twist of the first book, This Side of Murder, but this new book features Verity struggling to find her place after losing her wartime assignment (like many women of the period). It also introduced me to the concept of battlefield tourism, where families visited the sites of their loved ones deaths. We've got Treacherous is the Night in new (and used, at time of printing) in trade paperback. I'm also excited for book #7 in Huber's 'Lady Darby Mystery' series An Artless Demise, coming in trade paperback in April.

Genevieve Cogman's 'Invisible Library' series is a great example of a crossover between mystery and fantasy. Book #5, The Mortal Word, is set in a version of 1890s Paris and features a clash between Librarians, Dragons, and the Fae and our fearless librarian Irene trying to negotiate peace. I will confess that this is a series that one should start from the beginning, but it is well worth it. Think of it like a more serious 'Thursday Next'.

I will admit that I get nervous when a book starts alternating chapters from the 'present' to the 'past', but I should have known that Tasha Alexander could pull it off. Uneasy Lies the Crown is book #13 in her excellent 'Lady Emily' series. This is a point in a series where things can get boring or jump the shark, but I think Alexander continues to produce page-turning adventures for Lady Emily and Colin Hargreaves. This book features the death of Queen Victoria and a possible threat to the new King. It is still in hardcover, but the trade paperback is coming in July and a new hardcover is planned for the fall. This is a series you could dip your toe into at any point without much trouble, as the back story is not a huge feature, although certainly worth going back for.

As to what I'm looking forward to adding to my pile (but hopefully for not too long), the trade paperback of Why Kill the Innocent?, also book #13 in C.S. Harris' excellent 'Sebastian St. Cyr' series is coming at the end of February with the new hardcover, Who Slays the Wicked?, will be released at the beginning of April. I can't say enough good things about this series that features two compelling characters in Sebastian and his headstrong wife Hero, as well as their immediate circle of imperfect associates. This is maybe a tough series to jump into mid-series, but a number of books are available in mass market (we have some in used, even), so it's a worthwhile project to undertake.

I still miss Deanna Raybourn's 'Lady Julia Grey' series, but her new-ish 'Veronica Speedwell' series is also excellent and certainly more fun. Book #3, A Treacherous Curse, will be released in trade paperback n mid-February and book #4, A Dangerous Collaboration, will be available in hardcover in March. There is something of a 'will they or won't they' romantic sub-plot that I am beginning to find tedious, but I'm still buying this one on release.

And finally, two long awaited releases. As longtime newsletter readers know, I am a huge fan of Jasper Fforde and I have liked everything he has written, no matter how different it was from my beloved 'Thursday Next' series. But it's been five years since The Eye of Zoltar (book #3 in his YA series 'The Chronicles of Kazam') and I despaired of anything coming down the pipe. But now there is a stand alone novel called Early Riser coming out in hardcover later this month. It sounds weird. It is categorized as 'Fantasy - Contemporary / Dystopian / Thrillers'. But like I said, I have loved everything that Jasper Fforde has ever written, so I am willing to give it a try.

I loved Zen Cho's The Sorcerer to the Crown when it came out four years ago. It was such a unique combination of fantasy and regency romance and gender/race issues. But as sometimes happens with sparkling debuts, book #2 took awhile (this is why agents will tell you to write book #2 while you query book #1). Finally though, book #2 is announced and The True Queen will be released in trade paperback in March. I'll admit, this is one where I'm going to have to go back and read book #1 before I read the new title.

Finally, I really enjoy Brittany Cavallaro's 'Charlotte Holmes' series, although I will include a bit of a content warning here as teenage Charlotte has the same penchant for drug-related vice as her storied ancestor. Book #3, The Case for Jamie, was just released in trade paperback (at a very reasonable $12.50). The next book, A Question of Holmes, will be released in hardcover in March. You'll want to read the backlist on this one to catch up, as it might be a bit disorienting to jump later into the series (the Holmes, Watson, and Moriarty families get up to A LOT of shenanigans).

What Penelope's Reading by Sian

The tyranny of life with a toddler is reading the same book over and over again, and I'm not above hiding a book I'm tired of reading (or having thrown at me and board books are HEAVY).

I struggle a bit with books without a narrative, but Penny really enjoys Numbers by John J. Reiss. It's very colourfully illustrated and is an attractive counting book.

Robert Munsch obviously played a huge role in my childhood so I was thrilled that many of his books are now available in board book format. We started with The Paper Bag Princess and Penny is a huge fan, plus I love the messaging that you don't have to change yourself for a handsome prince, even if he does have good hair.

Although we predominantly read board books, we don't generally restrict Penny access to paper books and that does mean they do get a bit of (mostly unintentional) abuse. I had kept back Nicky Mehta's Away But Never Gone on account of the fact that it is such a lovely package, but Penny dug it out and we've been reading it. I think the messaging is lost on her so far but I'm happy for it to become familiar to her should we need to have any conversations about grief in the future.

We have some friends who have slightly older kids and they have gifted us a lot of the books that have become Penny's favorites. Despite the fact that it is not a board book, The Philharmonic Gets Dressed is always at the top of her To Read pile. This is a book from 1986 that was featured on 'Reading Rainbow' (remember that?) and it does just what it says on the tin: describes how the New York Philharmonic gets dressed for a concert. The first line, "It is almost Friday night. Outside, the dark is getting darker and the cold is getting colder," feels very appropriate for winter reading.

Mystery Reading Club

While we were sorry to have to delay January's meeting, the good news is that there will still be lots of opportunity for people to join us for the Winter Sessions!

Tuesday, February 26th – Devil in a Blue Dress by Walter Mosley
Tuesday, March 26th – New England White by Stephen L. Carter
Tuesday, April 30th – Bluebird, Bluebird by Attica Locke

By the February meeting we will have the books for May & June in stock.

We know that some non-members of the group do read the assigned titles. If you would like to have the questions that Jack writes, please let Wendy know (via email, phone, or in person). New members are always welcome.
